PROJECT SUMMARY

Title: Precipitation & PH gradient based separation & isolation of phyto constituents-

An objective of this minor project is to provide sustainable, cost-effective and eco friendly methodology of fractionation to obtain repertoire of natural products. Increasing demand of novel and safe medicine have great onus on drug discovery scientist. One of the option to find novel drugs is expectations from ethno medicinal plants. However, cost and time of fractionation, separation and bioactivity guided isolation of phytoconstituents limits its usefulness. So bioactivity guided isolation of phytoconstituents always needs an economical as well as time saving method. This project is an endeavour to provide plausible solution for the same. Overall practical and experimental work of project was planned accordingly, starting from Collection of Ethno medicinal plants, Purchasing of chemicals and call for instrument purchase, Extraction of Ethno medicinal plants with suitable solvents, Precipitation & pH gradient separation of different phytoconstituents class, Qualitative analysis of fractionated, separated group of phytoconstituents.

Plants were selected on the basis valuable source for bioactive phytocostituents and further demand for the food, nutraceutical, and pharmaceutical industries. Therefore Tea leaves, Terminalia catappa leaves and Randia dumetorum fruits were finalised for study. Tea leaves were collected as branded tea available in market, Terminalia catappa leaves were collected from botanical garden of the institute, and Randia dumetorum fruits were procured from Shree Sail Nursery, Nagpur. Selected plant material was made suitable for extraction and successively extracted. After preliminary confirmation of interested phytoconstituents, extracts were further subjected to pH dependent fractionation and precipitation based separation, specific for polyphenolic phytoconstituents. Fractionated polyphenol rich was qualitatively assessed using preliminary screening chemical test such as  $FeCl_3$  and Shinoda test. Same fractions were further subjected for UV-Vis spectrum to validate the presence of phenolic transitional spectrum. Finally fractions were subjected to TLC fingerprinting and sprayed with  $FeCl_3$  to assert the presence of polyphenols.

PROJECT SUMMARY

Title: Neurological Evaluation of Hibiscus rosa sinensis bioactive fractions

It was planned to explore Hibiscus rosa sinensis leaves part for its Anxiolytic potential and accordingly three extracts were prepared first defatted with petroleum ether and further extracted with ethyl acetate and methanol. These extracts were tested for its phytochemical estimation and antioxidant and antianxiety activity. Preliminary phytochemical evaluation of three extracts was carried out for the determination of presence of phytoconstituents. It reveals that all three extracts (i.e. Petroleum ether, ethyl acetate, methanol) contain carbohydrate, glycosides, alkaloids, proteins, amino acids, steroids, tannins, flavonoids. Presence of phytoconstituents were further confirmed by Thin Layer Chromatography.

The two extracts were tested for in vivo antianxiety activity. The obtained results showed that all the extracts showed significant anxiolytic effect at respective doses of 100 mg/kg and 200 mg/kg according to body weight when compared with standard drug Diazepam. The methanolic extract at a dose of 200 mg/kg showed best result than ethyl acetate extracts. It shows the dose-dependent anxiolytic potential by Light & Dark model.

Results of in vitro and in vivo Pharmacological screening suggest that Hibiscus rosa sinensis Methanol extract (HR-ME) shown better significance and promising anxiolytic response over other extracts; hence for further study of fractions, only Hibiscus rosa sinensis Methanol extract (HR-ME) was selected, similar to the extract the fractionation was carried out successively with Ethyl acetate (EA) and Acetone (AC), and phytochemical evaluation, TLC fingerprinting and further antioxidant response was evaluated, which revealed that HRME-ACF has better response over HRME-EAF, hence for further light and dark model HRME-ACF was considered which shown significant anxiolytic response.
